My Voice in America's Democracy

One day, actually a few days ago, my teacher told our class that we had to write a Patriots Pen essay on My Voice in America's Democracy. So that day, when I got home, I thought of everything about America. Like the law and the presidential election, then I realized that I don't have a voice in those things until I'm eighteen years old.

I also realized how many people try, and most fail, at getting into the US illegally. I thought, "This must be a pretty good country for people to risk their lives to get in here. Maybe we should make it more unbearable to not try to get in."

Okay enough about the people getting into the US, it's not my business anyway, I can use my voice for something different. Like technological advancements. For technological advancements I don't mean laser guns, forcefields, and floating tanks, although that would be nice, I'm talking about auto driving cars, floating signs, and robots.

We can feel even more free if maybe there was less inflation. We also need better or more advanced schools mainly because I've had fourteen spelling corrections make that fifteen. I also think we need more security at schools. Take the shooting for example, terrible tragedy, that may not have happened if there were guards. I'm not trying to be rude or anything, I'm just saying we can be more secure.

Yes this country has had its ups and downs and yes we are a great country but we can be a better one like that, I snapped by the way. So let's do that, let's be a better country. If we could let some of these essays help our amazing country, imagine what could happen.
