

My Voice in America's Democracy

My voice and opinions on democracy do matter. As a 12 year old girl in 6th grade I should have opinions on democracy, some adults may think that I shouldn't have an opinion, but I disagree.

Since I have a voice, I should have an opinion. I think I should and so do veterans and many other people. Although most kids only believe what their parents believe doesn't mean kids shouldn't have a voice. Some children push beliefs of their own onto other people and that's okay, although, sometimes it can be annoying.

But, just because I think I should have a voice in democracy doesn't mean everyone is obliged to agree with me, and that's completely fine. People have opinions that I respect. I think we are all happy that we live in the U.S though, we have freedom. Unfortunately not everyone has freedom like I do.

I'm happy i dont have the responsibilities or problems that a child that doesn't have freedom like I do has. In fact my responsibilities don't even compare to other children in other states and countries.

But there are many problems in this world other than just children that face many challenges daily. Like the homeless, the poor, the starved, the people that had their homes destroyed due to hurricanes. I can list so many more. But, all the government has to do is donate money or help address these problems.

It is not that difficult to fix these problems. Even as normal citizens we can still make a change by donating. We can donate food, blankets, pillows, money, anything that would help. We can watch the news and be more aware of what's happening in this world. I believe if we watch the news more we would have so much more knowledge and that would help us make the world a better place.

Because prices for daily necessities have gone up so much it has been the reason some people that are in the lower class have been starving. All the government has to do is lower the prices for food. I believe that if they did it would make this world a better place. For example, the war veterans have fought for our freedom, they made the world a better place for us.

In conclusion, my voice is small, but democracy is big. Every child can make a change even if it's just a small change. I believe that we can make the world a better place!. We just have to try.
